

HOW TO SURVIVE AT CHRISTMAS

Like the way I make love, Christmas is not for everyone.

Unlike the way I make love it's expensive, can make you sick, and is usually done with the family.

OK, I'm going to stop talking about how I make love and start giving tips for how to survive Christmas, right here, right now:

TIPS:

1.) If you don't like your family, tell them you can't be with them this year as you are volunteering in a soup kitchen. This gives your mum something to show off about; "yes, it's so Alan to be giving up his Christmas for those in need". Now, you will actually have to do at least half a day volunteering otherwise it's bad karma - but hey, you might like it, and if not, at least you get a picture for your dating profile. Who is the hot guy with the heart of gold? It's you.

2.) If you're in need of some extra cash dress up as Santa and charge parents £10 for their children to spend some time with you. Don't get them any gifts, instead give the kids some home truths about capitalism & disappointment. Hey, you're giving them an experience & that is priceless.

3.) Use this as an opportunity to get creative with drinks recipes. Blend together vodka, yoghurt, frazzles, and the juice from 1 mango. And what have you got? An excuse to leave the party early. You've made yourself rather sick. And wasted the frazzles.

4.) If you're skint make everyone a present - might I suggest a Photoshopped picture of you as your friend's baby - its sassy, its hilarious and you look adorable in a bonnet.

5.) Teach other people's kids funny words and get them to do pranks. Why is little Sam asking everyone what their intentions are towards him? Because you've taught him to and it's pretty amusing.

Hope these tips have helped you. And remember if you're still not looking forward to Christmas, you can always change faiths. The Jewish have some adorable customs and delicious snacks - not to mention the networking!

Peace to all men, women & tots!
